Super Bowl commercials: Aimee Picchi MoneyWatch October 13, , 6: Pfizer's pain medication Lyrica jumped 45 percent on a per-prescription basis between and , according to Medicare data. About eight out of 10 Americans say prescription drug costs are unreasonable, up from roughly seven out of 10 a year ago, according to a recent poll from the Kaiser Family Foundation. We have to go through these big companies, and they charge so much. Price hikes have helped Lyrica's manufacturer bolster its bottom line. The per-prescription price differs from the annual price because a year's supply includes more than one prescription. Generics are a great way to save money in lots of cases, but here is a look at some clear exceptions. Gleevec's massive price increase hasn't come all at once, but through incremental price hikes each year, the Post noted. Moneywatch Spotlight 9 American cities with the worst income inequality.
