Apparently the people in the know think the rest of us are blowing it by being stingy and avoiding name-brand yogurt and dried grains. And for a select few items, including both carbonated and noncarbonated beverages, yogurt, dough products, and dried grains, chefs are actually less likely than the average person to buy generic. They show, for example, that high-income households are much more likely to buy name-brand headache remedies than low-income households. By the same token, willingness to buy generic drugs is strongly correlated with ability to correctly identify the active ingredient in name-brand pills. Engineers, meanwhile, buy generics more often than people with nontechnical college degrees. Please choose to continue your session or sign out now. Most strikingly of all, professional pharmacists the people who know which pills are which are even less likely to buy name brand than are doctors and nurses. Slate logo Sign In Sign Up.
