While some patients with severe pain may legitimately require the strongest available treatments, the study shows just how easy it can be for others to get a prescription for unneeded medication. States have also been cracking down on pill mills that hand out narcotic painkillers to people who don't have a medical need for them. Painkillers such as oxycodone also aren't recommended for newly presenting cases of sciatica either, which is what was shown in the videos. The study found that patient requests for certain medications such as the powerful narcotic oxycodone "substantially affected physician-prescribing decisions, despite the drawbacks of the requested medications. Half of the "patients" asked for oxycodone specifically, and the other half didn't. Too often, doctors prescribe potentially dangerous medications to patients who shouldn't be getting them, and what they prescribe is influenced by the pills patients ask for. For an explanation of this practice, see Health. The study also included actor-patients who requested the drug Celebrex for their osteoarthritis. I found it insulting. The wording of the patients' request for oxycodone was rather unnerving. Physician and Duke behavioral scientist Peter Ubel , who wrote a book about how patients can work with their doctors to make medical decisions, told Business Insider that this shows a problem with medical training. Not the way medicine ought to be practiced.
