The paleoclimate record offers ideal human-unperturbed scenarios to investigate global and regional temperature and hydrological responses to changes in radiative forcing by greenhouse gases and other forcing agents. This work involves recovering paleoclimate archives speleothems, corals, lake sediments and using a variety of proxies oxygen isotopes, elements, fauna. This discrepancy produces different climate scenarios of Plio-Pleistocene climate evolution. In addition, it has shown that higher Pliocene tropical Pacific temperatures and the secular cooling during the late Pliocene are consistent with a progressive decrease in atmospheric CO<sub>2</sub> over the Plio-Pleistocene, in agreement with models that attempt to simulate Pliocene warmth. Historical records of marine pollutants are necessary in order to understand the fate and residence time of atmospheric and marine pollutants. Marine Sciences and Climate Change. The practically invariable partition coefficient between many elements in seawater and the coral crystal lattice makes corals ideal archives of changes in seawater chemistry and particularly marine pollutants such as lead, cadmium, etc. Coral archives of historical pollution. As a member of the PALEOSENS group constituted in this meeting, I am currently contributing to the development of a consistent framework to report paleoclimate sensitivity estimates and conducting an assessment of whether global temperature sensitivity depends on the climate state. The goal of this research is to understand the role of the tropical regions on global climate change and how these regions have responded to climate forcings and feedbacks.

i. Climate over these regions is influenced by large-scale atmospheric phenomena related to the American Monsoon and the Lowest Cost Cialis. Free online consultation. Search Over medications.
