Stars Screen Binge Culture Media. Americans, on average, pay some of the highest prices in the world for prescription drugs. If it were able to negotiate with pharmaceuticals directly, it could drive the price of drugs down. In the United States "we don't have a central agency, governmental or NGO non-governmental organization that engages in comparative research that comes up with clear statements of drugs efficacies," Kesselheim added. Bach, of Memorial Sloan Kettering, said that when buyers can say no, for whatever reason, they can control prices better. But in the United States, we have individual insurance groups, hospitals and plans that buy for their individual consumers. Considering all these factors, it may boil down to one thing, said Kesselheim. That sale negotiation will either make or break whether they can be in that market. This recommendation helps providers determine a price they are willing to pay for the drug. But Americans also pay some of the highest prices for those drugs, relative to the rest of the world. In fact, Bach's hospital refused the colon cancer drug Zaltrap in because it cost double that of a reasonably good alternative, Avastin. Here's one fix for high drug prices.
