Physician and Duke behavioral scientist Peter Ubel, who wrote a book about how patients can work with their doctors to make medical decisions, told Business Insider that this shows a problem with medical training. Too often, doctors prescribe potentially dangerous medications to patients who shouldn't be getting them, and what they prescribe is influenced by the pills patients ask for. Pain specialists can also be located through online directories below.

Shutterstock A new study published in the April issue of the journal Medical Care highlights a troubling reality of today's health care landscape: The wording of the patients' request for oxycodone was rather unnerving. Other restrictions may apply. Still, the results of the study could be partially attributed simply to the power of suggestion, Ubel said.
