In revising this assessment in April , we evaluated several factory-treated clothing exposure scenarios including short-term and long-term cancer risks to adults, youth, and toddlers wearing permethrin-treated clothing. At about the same time, we also approved permethrin as a spray for use on clothing and gear by consumers, as well as for commercial factory treatment of clothing and various types of gear. December 19 23, Monday, December 19 8 In evaluating pesticides for registration, we require the manufacturers to provide a variety of studies on the health and environmental effects of each chemical and product. The amount of permethrin allowed in clothing is very low, and scientific studies indicate that human exposure resulting from wearing permethrin factory-treated clothing also is low. Why the Label Calls for Washing Clothes Separately Small amounts of permethrin can come off in the wash, as shown by available scientific studies. All exposure scenarios showed that permethrin factory-treated clothing is unlikely to pose any significant immediate or long-term hazard to people wearing the clothing. As with any pesticide product, consumers must follow the directions and precautions on the "hang-tag" label that accompanies this clothing. We periodically reevaluate all registered pesticides to ensure continued compliance with current scientific and safety standards. Top of Page Safety of Permethrin in Factory-Treated Clothing When evaluating these products in the pesticide registration process, we follow normal risk assessment procedures to determine safety.
