Be honest about your medical and prescription history. But where does that leave chronic pain patients? While the primary focus of this crackdown was Florida, the DEA actions have had a chilling effect on pharmacies and distributors in some other states as well. Refills of controlled substances are strictly regulated. In an effort to curb this oxy epidemic, the DEA began cracking down not only on Florida doctors, but also on pharmacies and wholesale drug distributors in the state. There was a true oxycodone shortage in but that was not related to this current problem. Distributors are expected to monitor, report and even cut off pharmacies who order too many opioids. But the fact is, their actions sometimes do harm us - a lot. What is in short supply are pharmacists who are willing and able to fill your prescription. Some chronic pain patients, particularly in Florida, are finding it difficult to fill their oxycodone prescriptions at their local pharmacies. Simply put, chronic pain patients are collateral damage in the war on drugs.
