I have to take penicillin twice a day for the rest of my life as a precautionary thing, and also have to buy garments a lot for my legs. The reason I ask is that my local pharmacist is a very small shop which hardly seems to stock much toothpaste, shampoo or any of the other stock-in-trades of that profession. When you go to a private hospital, when they send you out with a prescription it works the same - although lots of people tend to try to get them changed to NHS prescriptions to save money! This is true and it has benefited me for years as I have a mild thyroid deficiency and take low dose thyroxin - so I have a prescription exemption card. What rankles me is one of the unfittest nations on earth pays a lot less than England. But I honestly think the whole prescription thing needs to be sorted out, especially if you were born with said illness or it is a life long occurrence, rather than a one off. Dr will suggest which is best. The hard facts are that the money that is brought in will be hard to replace.
