After hijacking the van on the highway in Hoover, the thieves drove back to Birmingham with Latham. Win, Win, Win, Win, Win. The entire incident lasted 12 seconds. The vans and small trucks bringing pharmaceuticals to their final destination are most often driven by independent contractors. Even the pharmaceutical companies would win. The driver of a courier van in the Detroit area made it even easier for thieves. Known in the shipping industry as last-mile thefts, the courier robberies are causing alarm because in addition to putting addictive prescription drugs in the hands of criminals, these incidents often involve the use of weapons and take place in busy public areas, such as pharmacy parking lots. In the Alabama robbery, the courier was delivering products for McKesson. Email Address Please enter a valid email address. In the last two years, there have been nearly last-mile pharmaceutical thefts nationwide, according to FreightWatch International, an Austin, Texas, firm that provides logistics security services to companies. A Vietnam War veteran, Latham said he was prepared to grab the wrench and fight his way out. The man reached in to the van and hit the button to unlock all the doors. By David Armstrong December 22, After disabling the alarm system, they backed a tractor-trailer into a loading dock and made off with 49 pallets of pharmaceuticals. And where we rarely saw violent attacks in cargo thefts, these are unusual in that they involve the threat of force or the use of force. The result is a patchwork delivery system with varying security standards. An industry group, which has recently focused on improving pharmacy delivery van security, reported 87 cases of robbery, theft, and what it calls suspicious activity related to last-mile deliveries in the first 11 months of this year.
