States have also been cracking down on pill mills that hand out narcotic painkillers to people who don't have a medical need for them. Some physicians ask the patient to sign a contract, which may include things like having pills counted at each visit, keeping with the same doctor to avoid "doctor shopping," and regularly turning up in person. Even though the risk of addiction to opioid medications is low for chronic pain patients, heightened awareness of abuse and stepped-up law enforcement against misuse has spooked many physicians, making it harder for some pain patients to get the drugs they need. Too often, doctors prescribe potentially dangerous medications to patients who shouldn't be getting them, and what they prescribe is influenced by the pills patients ask for. It empowered the staff by giving them something they could forward to anyone seeking more information about new appointments, particularly pain patients.
