I'm not generally a brand name person or anything. So I go in today after seeing him and they only have generic ones. I was of the mind that there is no difference between brand name and generic drugs, it is only with the Benzos where this theory applies. One is for "prescription as written" and one is for "voluntary formulary". I was prescribed Xanax for years, always got generics, many different kinds of generics over the years and I never noticed any difference, except that 2mgs felt stronger than 1mg, obviously. I told my pharmacist that I would prefer the brand name though, and from that point on he gave it to me. I can't tell about the proportions of the binders etc but I don't see why there would be a difference. However if on your prescription it is written "Alprazolam" the pharmacy does not have to give you brand name Xanax and can give you any generic they please at least that's how it works where I live. There is a reason and it is because benzos have an ability to create insane tolerance and very subjective results depending on your use of benzos. Back when I used to take Ritalin I could notice diminished effects when I took the generic, Methylphenid. As a physician prescribing many many medications to different patients regularly I have not come across any problems with the usage of generics from the point of efficacy. For one thing, brand name meds have to be manufactured in accordance with the highest standards for purity and potency, as specified by the FDA. The Pharmacy makes FAR more profit pushing the generic over the branded product, and in turn passes this along to the Pharmacist. In fact I have even done chemical analysis comparing different brands of aspirin and acetaminophen and found that some generic versions contained more of the drug than the name brands did. I was reading another forum where people were saying that Xanax was much better than the generic. If that's the case, I'm willing to spend a little. Jun 8, - Non-generics are nothing more than brand name stuff. I guess a better example would be - this is why a white tee-shirt with a Nike logo costs waaaay more than a plain white t-shirt. There is nothing inherent about a generic that sets it aside as a lesser. Brand names have been driving prices up beyond Drug info - - Which Xanax are the most potent? Oct 19, - I hadn't really experienced the difference between the two, because I hadn't ever had the brand name version of Xanax. Well, this past prescription I decided to pay the extra for the brand name. Wow. In my opinion, the brand name works so much better than the generic. I know they are supposed to be. Oct 9, - Although consumers report there are no evident differences between the effectiveness and safety between the generic and brand-name drugs, one of the noticeable differences lies in the cost of both drug types. Alprazolam is generally a less costly version of Xanax because its price doesn't pay for any. By coordinating with your doctor, pharmacist, and drug companies, you're sure to find more ways to manage prescription costs. Ask for a generic. While not always available, many prescription drugs including Xanax have a generic form on the market that is much less expensive. The generic for this medication -- alprazolam. I was wondering if anyone has noticed any potency/quality differences in generic versus brand name alprazolam? One of my friends uses benzos frequently, and claims that the generics feel about half as strong to him. That could just be an excuse to use twice as much though. I know they are supposed to.
